Capital punishment in Chile

Capital punishment is a legal sanction in Chile. The death penalty was abolished in 1819 during the return of order period, after the Chilean War of Independence (1810–1814). The last execution was carried out in 1926, nine years after the coup d'état of Augusto Pinochet; the last official execution was in 1976. Chile's last penal reform was carried out in 1999, when mandatory sentencing laws were adopted. According to the report of the Senate of Chile in August 2019, capital punishment is almost extinct in Chile due to its inefficiency and discriminatory treatment of defendants who don't have a powerful family. History Before the independence of Chile, it was clear that death was the most severe and irreversible punishment. During the war of independence, the most feared punishment was a soldier's being shot with a musket. The criminal law decrees in Article 53 of the Constitution of 1833 that the penalty for murder is "reclusion perpetua" and that "anyone who causes the death of another will suffer any other penalty provided by the law, excluding pardon and remission of the death penalty". Article 56 of the Constitution of 1833 added that "the punishment for any violation of the State's public order is the death penalty and imprisonment for life". The execution was carried out in various locations in Santiago, but in the 19th century, the final execution was moved to a plaza inside the Morral Park in the city center. On 21 June 1926, in the first national radio broadcast, singer Lorenzo Torralbo received a death sentence for murdering her husband. The sentence was carried out the same year. After the Pinochet dictatorship, in 1999, mandatory sentencing laws were adopted. It was the first penal reform carried out by the government. It is the first time a country has adopted this kind of law without a new constitutional mandate. During the Chamber of Deputies session of 23 May 2019, a proposal was made to Congress to end mandatory sentencing. 55cdc1ed1c
